A BRIEF HISTORY

Nearly 127 years ago, the town of Calico was bustling with prospectors searching for its mineral riches. Silver was king here and the Calico Mining district became one of the richest in the state. Born in March, 1881, Calico could boast boomtown status, producing $86 million in silver, $45 million in borax, and a town population of 1,200 with 22 saloons, China Town and a red light district. Over 500 mines, including the legendary Silver King, Oriental and Bismarck were the engines that drove Calico's great wealth between the years of 1881 and 1907. Like most towns of the early West, when the price of silver dropped from $1.31 an ounce to $.63, Calico became a ghost of its former self.

Today, Calico is one of the few remaining original mining towns of the western United States, thanks to the help of Mr. Walter Knott, founder of Knott's Berry Farm. It was November, 1966, when Mr. Knott donated Calico to San Bernardino County.

Operating as a County Regional Park, Calico is alive and well. If you like to camp, the narrow canyons below town offer full hookups and are open 24 hours a day. Off-highway vehicle camping with restrooms and showers is also available.

Admission to the townsite is included with camping. Six camping cabins and a large bunkhouse for groups, complete with bunk beds, heating and air conditioning, are available for extended visits.

Calico is open daily all year long, except for Christmas Day. Townsite hours are 8:00 a.m. to dusk, with shops and attractions open from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.
